

Absolutely.....why wouldn't you want to? It's so much less expensive, and saves a lot of time.

Templates have gotten a bad name over the years. Advertising has inferred that templates are a bad thing....not so.

Since a template is still a page, or a group of pages, initially designed by a human, it can be thought of as a custom site. The word custom can be thought of as something that is done or designed from scratch to your specifications.

In relating custom design to template design, we must remember that no matter which way you choose, you will undoubtedly make changes over and over to satisfy the requirements.

Believe it or not, templates are used in many web sites these days. Template design is a very popular portion of the internet industry.

One possible undesirable feature to templates is that you can't control the design from the beginning. You have to, more or less, settle for the design of the template. But, with the amount of templates available these days, you are bound to find one that is very close to what you need. And we can modify many features of a template to help with that even more.

So yes....templates are certainly okay to use.....and even suggested, if you desire to save money.
